

New England Quarter keeps growing

Overview:

Brighton and Hove is home to the New England Quarter mixed use development, which consists of many commercial, residential and retail units.

Construction of the new area has taken over a decade with numerous phases adding to the modernity of this part of Brighton (near the railway station).

Outcome:

Bouygues appointed Adexsi UK to work on the residential units, which are split into two blocks each eight storeys in height, with other uses located on the ground floor. Such residential towers have a legislative requirement for smoke control systems to be installed, ensuring that if a fire were to break out means of escape and fire fighter access would be maintained as smoke free.
